SHU celebrates the state’s filmmaking history
“A Celluloid Story: New Jersey’s Filmmaking History” opens Thursday, Nov. 6, at the Walsh Gallery at Seton Hall University. Curated by Sarah Hart and Romana Schaeffer, the exhibition celebrates the 350th anniversary of New Jersey’s statehood by exploring the state’s pivotal role in film history from 1890 to 1920.

In conjunction with the exhibit, on Nov. 17, film historian and author Richard Koszarski will give a presentation on New Jersey’s role in the film industry.

A screening of Roscoe “Fatty” Arbuckle’s “A Reckless Romeo” will follow the presentation. The exhibition and program are free and open to the public.

Through objects and images, “A Celluloid Story” explores the stories of New Jersey inventors, studios, communities, films and celebrities who helped film to grow from a technological fad into a form of art. Portions of movies filmed in New Jersey, such as “He Did and He Didn’t” will be on view and those who embraced the movies will tell the story of the birth of film in New Jersey.

For more information, visit www.shu.edu/walshgallery. Seton Hall University is located at 400 S. Orange Avenue in South Orange. The Walsh Gallery is open from 10:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Law program seeks clients
Seton Hall University School of Law’s Investor Advocacy Program is looking for prospective clients who wish to bring a lawsuit against a stockbroker or a brokerage firm. IAP works provide free representation to victims of securities fraud. Law students in the clinic also travel the state to deliver presentations to audiences.

This program is designed to help clients who cannot afford legal representation and gives local law students practical experience. To qualify for representation, clients must be residents of New Jersey, have an annual income of less than $100,000, and have a legal claim of less than $100,000. For more information, call 973-392-4281.
